

Abstract

Title: Attitudes of people with special needs towards services of sexual assistance in the Czech Republic

Objectives: This bachelor thesis aims to explore and quantify whether people with special needs tend to think about services of sexual assistance mostly in a positive way or not.

Methods: As a method, quantitative research was used, which was realized by non-standardized survey. Survey consists of 19 questions. Answers of all respondents were exported to Microsoft Office Excel 2007 program, in which they were processed and converted into graphs and tables.

Results: People with special needs think of services of sexual assistance in the Czech Republic mostly positively. However, there is a difference of opinion between men and women. Generally, men tend to view those services in a more positive way than women do.

Keywords: sexual assistance, handicap, people with special needs